

Urine-philosophical Treatise

Janar Ala

1. The bladder is a hollow muscular pouch, which slowly expands upon collecting urine.
 - 1.1. The bladder can usually fit around 250-500 ml of urine.
 - 1.2. A muscular component of the bladder is called a urinary discharger or a detrusor.
 - 1.3. At the opening of the bladder there is a muscle called a shutter or a sphincter, which is shrunken and closed during breaks from urination.
 - 1.4. The bladder and the sphincter are usually subject to intentional control, which means that a person can control their urination.
2. This is one way of defining the bladder.
 - 2.1. There are more ways to do it, but lets choose one.
3. For the purposes of our story, lets distinguish the most important aspect: The bladder can usually fit around 250-500 ml of urine.
4. To bring an example: Once the bladder has collected one or two glasses of urine, a necessity to urinate occurs.
5. Aino sat in an SUV, and we do not know how much urine there was in his bladder, but we do know that it was causing him discomfort.
 - 5.1. There was too much urine in his bladder.
 - 5.2. One or two glassfuls.
 - 5.3. He was struck by a need to urinate.
6. Aino realised what was wrong with him.
 - 6.1. He was not mistaken.
 - 6.2. Aino felt clearly, that there was too much urine in his bladder.
 - 6.3. Aino envisioned a glass.
 - 6.4. In Aino's imagination, the glass broke.
 - 6.5. This was a symbol, which was clearly identified as a negative one.
 - 6.6. Aino put in his best effort so that the glass stays whole, but it would not.
 - 6.7. In spirit, Aino had given up.
 - 6.8. Negativity had an upper hand over Aino.
7. He tried to recall, but soon realised that recalling is not good in such situation.
 - 7.1. Each toilet emergency is unique.
 - 7.2. It is an event.
 - 7.3. It is a fact.
8. One who recalls, lives long.
9. He did not want to spoil everything.
10. That which cannot be spoken of, should be kept in silence.
11. People had more spare time than usual and this time they had decided to spend it by driving their SUVs in a circle.
 - 11.1. Wasting is fun.

12. Aino sat in an SUV and his bladder was causing him concern.

12.1. A diesel engine was singing its last song.

12.2. The song was beautiful.

12.3. The song was solemn.

12.4. The song reminded a song of pearls.

13. Aino's problem was not what to do, but how to do it.

13.1. In a different situation Aino's problem could have been considered a philosophical one, but in this situation it had to simply be called a toilet emergency.

13.2. Aino was suffering.

14. When cars have driven in circles for so long that a toilet emergency can really be called its proper name, then it can be stated that they've driven enough already.

14.1. Signs of boredom.

15. Car b attempted to overtake car a.

15.1. Car a was not satisfied with the current state of affairs.

15.2. "I'm fed up!"

15.3. No-one was satisfied.

15.4. The evil circle of dissatisfaction.

16. Lets not forget that the drive had been taking place in circles and in vain, and time had come for a long-awaited spare time.

16.1. It could be also noted in this document that there was plenty of spare time.

16.2. There was shitloads of spare time.

16.3. That, which appears in plentitude, should be somehow regulated - so states the law.

16.4 The law states that one way to do it is to form a circle.

17. What is happening here?

18. We're taking a piss, so what?

19. It is a natural process.

19.1. Citing from memory: The bladder and the shutter muscle are usually subject to intentional control, which means that a person can control their urination.

20. A person was loosing control over their bladder, such was the truth.

21. By virtue of fate, artist Fred Kotkas, who happened to be passing through the forest, saw all of the above.

22. Fate had struck Fred in the middle of a forest, such was the truth.

23. Fred found in front of himself a crumbling circle.

24. Something could be done with this.

25. He had decided.
